According to a very general belief, the toad is endowed with a supernatur-al power of existence which enables it to live for ages without food or air, and the oft-repeated tales of the finding of live toads inclosed in a solid rock gain ready credence. Such reports can have little foundation in fact. Curious to earn the actual extent of vitality of this reptile, Dr. Buckland enclosed twenty cells of limestone and sandstone-the limestone cells being considerably larger than the others. On the 26th of November, 1825, the stones and their tenants were buried in the doctor's garden, where they remained until December 10th, 1826, when they were disintered. All the toads in the sandstone were dead, and had probably been in that condition for some time. all the toads in the limestone cells were, however, alive. One or two had actually increased in weight, which shows that some opening must have existed in the cells, through which insects and air gained admittance. The toads which were found alive were again buried, and all died during the second year of their imprisonment. These experiments seem to establish conclusively the fact that even the toad cannot exist for a very extended period without ist for a very extended period without air and food. It is, therefore, pretty safe to assert that living toads are never found in solid rocks.

A rather amusing incident is told as having occurred recently at a church in Connecticut, not many miles from Fairfield. The clergyman, it would appear, desired to call the attention of his congegation to the fact that it being the last Sunday in the month he would administer the rite of baptism to elfildren. Previous to his having entered the pulpit he had received from one of his cliders, who, by the way, was quite deat, a notice to the effect that as the chilidren would be present that afternoon, and he had the new Sunday-school books ready for distribution, he would have them there to sell to all who desired them. After the sermon the clergyman began the notice of the baptismal service thus: "All of those having chilidren and desiring to have them baptised will bring them this afternoon." At this point the deaf clder, hearing the monition of children, supposed it was something in reference to his books, and rising, said: "And all of those having none, and desiring them, will be supplied by me for the sum of 25 cents.

It sown Language.

Wickedly anxious to obey orders to the very letter was a Mexican taking a stand in a New York police court the other day as a witness in an assault case. Having informed the judge that he spoke English, he was told to state what he knew of the affair in question. Thereupon the prosecuting attorney, an Irishman by birth, quite unnecessarily intervened:

"Ye onderstands, sor, that ye are to go on, and state to the coort what ye know about this case in your own language."
